The Congressional Nomination Process

- Every year, each Member of Congress is authorized to nominate candidates to four* U.S. Service Academies:
 - United States Military Academy at West Point
 - United States Naval Academy
 - United States Merchant Marine Academy
 - United States Air Force Academy
- In addition to applying directly to a Service Academy, all applicants are required to obtain a nomination. Nominations may be awarded by United States Senators, United States Representatives, and the Vice President. Additional nomination sources include Reserve Officer Training Corps Units, children of deceased or disabled veterans, and children of Medal of Honor recipients.
- Every Senator and Representative uses different criteria when awarding academy nominations.
- Congressman Auchincloss uses a holistic approach, taking into consideration an applicant's academics, leadership, and service to determine who receives a nomination.
- Congressman Auchincloss utilizes an independent panel comprised of service academy graduates to interview applicants and review applications.

*Individuals interested in applying to the United States Coast Guard Academy are not required to receive a nomination.

Selection Process

- After a thorough review of application material, each applicant will receive a final score.
- Applicants with a top fifteen final score for each academy will receive a nomination from Congressman Auchincloss.
- Students who do not earn a top fifteen score for their first academy choice may still earn a top ten score for their second academy choice.
- Each service academy will independently review every applicant who receives a congressional nomination and issue offers of appointment at their discretion.
- A Congressional nomination to a Service Academy does not guarantee admission to the Academy.
